The CAG Works for Geographers

The Association offers:

The principal annual conference in Canada on the discipline of geography, welcoming papers, panel discussions, workshops, and field trips. Generous funding is available to assist our student members to attend.

The Canadian Geographer, the major academic journal for the discipline in Canada.

Links to other disciplines. The CAG is a member organization of the Canadian Federation for the Humanities and Social Sciences and the Canadian Federation of Geosciences. These umbrella organizations work directly with the major research-granting councils, and engage in parliamentary lobbying.

Support for professional certification of geographers working in earth sciences, geomatics, and planning. The CAG monitors certification issues, lobbies on behalf of geographers, and recommends curricula updates to ensure geographers remain eligible for professional certification.

National linkages. The CAG maintains formal links with the Canadian Council for Geographic Education, the Canadian Geomorphology Research Group, and l'Association professionnelle des géographes du Québec.

International linkages. The CAG has formal links with the International Geographical Union (IGU), and has membership agreements with the American Association of Geographers and the RGS-IBG of Britain.

Strength in numbers. The more geographers belong to the CAG, the more all members benefit, and the more services we can offer.

We value your participation.

CAG Membership Benefits:

4 issues annually of The Canadian Geographer, an international, peer-reviewed journal.

The CAG annual Directory, containing information on people, programmes, and current research in university geography departments, and in government and private sectors.

6 issues annually of The CAG Newsletter, which includes news on members, bibliographic and technical features, and job announcements.

Special registration rates to attend the annual meetings.

The opportunity to present papers at national and regional meetings, and to publish in CAG publications.

CAG study groups, which bring together geographers with specialized interests. These groups often host themed conference sessions, publish newsletters and Proceedings, and provide student support.

Travel grants for students to present papers at national and regional meetings. To be eligible for a grant to the annual meeting, one must be a paid-up student member for both the year of application and the previous year.

Automatic membership in the CAG Regional Division for your part of Canada. Divisions have their own newsletters and annual meetings, and some publish their own journals.

Members may register with the CAGList server mailserver, which provides our members with timely electronic information.

All for a reasonable membership fee.

CAG Membership period is from January 1 through December 31.
