REPORTS

4. The Canadian Geographer (TCG) – Editor’s Report*

TCG Editor Nadine Schuurman presented her report. She noted that the journal was affected by the pandemic in that there were fewer submissions and it was more difficult to find reviewers. There were four special sections in 2020, as well as efforts to increase the number of French papers thanks to French Editor Martin Simard. The most recent available Impact Factor was 1.032 for 2019. The editorial team continues to work on decreasing the time from submission to initial decision. The journal is in a good position overall.

5. Officers’ Reports:

a. Secretary-Treasurer’s Report

i. Financial Statements 2020*

CAG Secretary-Treasurer Joseph Leydon went over the audited financial statements, clarifying that the qualified report refers to insufficient documentation from some of the divisions and study groups that had not yet moved their funds to be held centrally. He highlighted that the investments are all performing well despite the pandemic.

The membership revenue declined substantially in 2020, which was to be expected during the pandemic. The royalty revenue remains relatively stable. The major expenses, related to publications (TCG and GeogNews) and operations of the central office, have remained relatively stable. As a result of the pandemic and the cancellation of in-person meetings, there were no travel expenses for executive members, no student travel grants, and none of the regular expenses associated with the Annual Meeting in 2020.

ii. Budget 2021

Joseph presented the budget, with actual revenues and expenses for 2020 and estimates for 2021. It is expected that revenues and expenditures for 2021 will be similar to those for 2020. Joseph proposed that the small surplus be held in reserve given the uncertainties of the pandemic and its potential impacts on revenue streams moving forward. Membership fees will remain at the 2020 level, in recognition of the difficulties that many institutions and members continue to face at this time.

Neil summarized his report, highlighting the recent and upcoming regional conferences, as well as the importance of virtual events and digital communications for keeping our community connected through the pandemic. He provided an update on the transition to a home-based central office. He thanked the Executive Committee members whose terms are ending, including Sanjay Nepal (Past President), Nancy Worth (Councillor), and Trevor Wideman (Student Councillor). Nathalie Gravel’s term as Councillor is ending and she is moving into the position of Vice-President. The executive had two additional virtual meetings in the past year, and will continue to meet more frequently moving forward, including virtual meetings in the fall and spring in addition to the regular annual meetings. This year, the executive meetings were held virtually outside of the conference program, which will likely continue in the future as a way to generate considerable cost savings from executive travel that can be earmarked for other purposes. Regarding the TCG, Nadine has agreed to stay on as editor until the end of 2023. He also provided some insight into the decline in membership, due in part to exceptional circumstances over the past several years, as outlined in the written report. The executive will be forming a Membership Task Force at its next meeting to evaluate and address the issue. He ended his report by sharing that he is proud of the accomplishments of the entire community as we've come through these challenging times, and looks forward to working together to renew and revitalize the CAG.
